Foodie Loves Kyushu!

On my last summer holiday, I went to Kumamoto in Kyushu, Japan. The reason I decided to visit was that there are lots of different foods to eat there. Also, I could collect stamps from different train stations.

The first place my family and I visited was Aso Mountain. It is one of the most famous places in Kyushu as there is a world-famous volcano there. We got there by cable car. I felt so good when I saw the beautiful scenery. Walking through the mountains and breathing the fresh air made me very relaxed.

There was a local farm under the mountain. My mum bought some local milk and fruits at the market there. After that, we went to a restaurant and ate Kumamoto ramen. The soup was made of pork bone and garlic. It was thick and delicious.

The next place we visited was Huis Ten Bosch. It is Asia's largest theme park. In different seasons, the tulip ocean is designed in different styles, such as Christmas, New Year and Easter. It had splendid music shows, water dance shows, and colorful fireworks shows. We stayed there for two days and enjoyed the beautiful views. We visited Flood Adventure Hall and Na Theatre. We also took photos with the blooming tulips. When night fell, we took a ship along the river and enjoyed the beautiful view. At night, everything was lit up with colorful lights. I will never forget how beautiful it was.

A nice journey is not only about playing well, eating well is important too. We found a traditional restaurant in Nagasaki. I ordered eel rice. It was so yummy! My mum ordered castella. It is a kind of cake that rich people in the Netherlands sent to people as a present and was passed on to the Japanese culture. It was soft and syrupy.

I knew it was an unforgettable trip. The resplendent theme park and picturesque views of Aso will always be in my memories. I will never forget what I saw and did during this wonderful trip.
