

Name: Woo Hoi Shan
Class: 1A
Text Type: Food Review
Topic: A Review of a Popular Hong Kong Dessert.

Palatable Pineapple Buns that you should check out

A pineapple bun with butter, a Hong Kong-styled dessert, is well-loved all over the world because of its superb taste. Bakeries in Hong Kong produce about 3000 pineapple buns each day. In 2014, the pineapple bun was listed as an intangible cultural heritage of Hong Kong. That was why I decided to give it a try when I visited a local restaurant last week.

The golden pineapple bun was sizeable and served with a sugary top crust which was cooked to a golden-brown colour. The fragrant buttery aroma and the scent of baked bread made me feel hungry. I loved the texture of the crust and bread, which was crunchy, extremely fluffy, and softer than western bread. Combined with the sweet and flavourful taste of the crust, the creamy texture of iced butter, and the fluffy bread, is often popular as a breakfast food or as a part of afternoon tea.

I also loved the milky and creamy butter inside of the bun, which increased the texture and the taste of the bun, but was a bit filling. Therefore, to accompany this food, I ordered a cup of hot Hong Kong-styled milk tea, which balanced the greasy butter inside the pineapple bun.

The pineapple bun with butter cost HK$10. It was cheap, as the portion size was big. Also, I suggest that the elderly do not eat too many because it contains fat and cholesterol. However, considering its taste and price, it was worth it. Therefore, I would recommend it to anyone who is keen on Hong Kong local food. Try it at any local bakery. I promise that you will eat it again.